Our priority is to deliver high-quality care to members in an accessible, affordable, coordinated and cost-effective manner, improving the population health of Medicaid beneficiaries while reducing per capita cost of health care.

Our population health approach aims to fill existing gaps, connecting populations experiencing health inequities to comprehensive resources through provider and community partnerships, resulting in program sustainability.

Our Key Priorities

Emphasizing person-centered care in order to improve population health

Person-Centered Programs

Our person-centered approach starts by building a trusting relationship with individuals and their families. We work to empower our members to be active participants in their own health, and aim to remove any barriers that stand in the way. Our highly-coordinated services address physical and behavioral health needs, as well as social determinants of health such as food, clothing, shelter and transportation.

Whole-Person Care Management

Our clinical management programs serve to optimize the health and well-being of members with chronic illness or who are at high risk for adverse medical outcomes. To accomplish this, we developed a member-focused, integrated complex clinical management model that facilitates collaboration between our members and their health care teams. These initiatives focus on improving member self-management skills, active decision-making and participation in health care interventions personalized to their risk profile and conditions. Additionally, we build upon our community-based, collaborative relationships to extend our reach in local communities where health disparities exist and can be improved. Targeted outreach initiatives assist members to achieve the following:

- Improve health outcomes and quality of life
- Support healthy lifestyles through targeted condition education and preventive health initiatives
- Manage chronic health conditions and other targeted health conditions
- Provide opportunities for member access to health education programs through community partnerships

The purpose of the Whole-Person Care (WPC) Management program is to facilitate appropriate health care services across the continuum of care, as well as to monitor and evaluate options and services to meet an individual's needs to promote quality, cost effective outcomes. WPC Management targets individuals who have a higher persistency of health care utilization with complex care needs and who have chronic and complex risk factors. The program's structure and functionality support the UnitedHealthcare Community & State commitment to ensure compliance with care management standards as set forth by state and federal regulatory agencies and accreditation organizations.

Growing Hope and Health in Housing

People experiencing homelessness and complex health needs require more than a place to sleep. That's why UnitedHealthcare created Housing + Health, a targeted and integrated solution for UnitedHealthcare members with complex medical conditions, behavioral health issues, and social disparities, such as homelessness. In communities across the country, Housing + Health is stabilizing the lives of high-risk members who are unhoused, while curbing health care costs and improving outcomes.

Housing + Health in Rhode Island

Robust Data Capabilities

Hotspotting and predictive analytics help pinpoint high need members who are most likely to realize the benefits of care interventions.

Safe Transition Housing

Following the Housing First model of care, members' journeys begin when they move into an apartment or congregate home.

Intensive Care Management

Interdisciplinary teams collaborate on member care plans, integrating physical and behavioral health with social and wraparound services.

Complex Care Philosophy

Experts in biophysical care practice a trauma informed and patient-centered approach that promotes behavior change.

Crossroads Rhode Island Partnership

For some of our members, utilization of the health care system is just one of many components to achieving good health. Members who live with complexities, like those experiencing homelessness, often seek help with frequent visits to ERs, hospitals and other facilities. These individuals seldom see improved health outcomes, yet the cost of care accumulates.

To help address these needs, UnitedHealthcare Community Plan and Crossroads Rhode Island formed a strategic partnership that helps to expand housing services for members experiencing homelessness or who have unstable housing, coupled with significant health care costs.

UnitedHealthcare Community Plan and Crossroads work together to provide housing assistance, transportation, in-person case management, and other support needs to help participating members improve their health, adhere to medical treatment plans, and address long-term housing arrangements.

Today, there are ten UnitedHealthcare members currently enrolled in the program and living in a renovated home located in Pawtucket, where each member has their own dedicated unit.

A stable home is vital to overall health. Together, we hope to significantly grow this program and continue to improve people's lives one home at a time.

Community Providers

Federally qualified health centers (FQHCs) serve as the primary care home for nearly 30 million patients, including 1 in 5 Medicaid beneficiaries. In recognition of the valuable role they play in our health care system, UnitedHealthcare is partnering with FQHCs in new ways to expand access to care and improves outcomes.

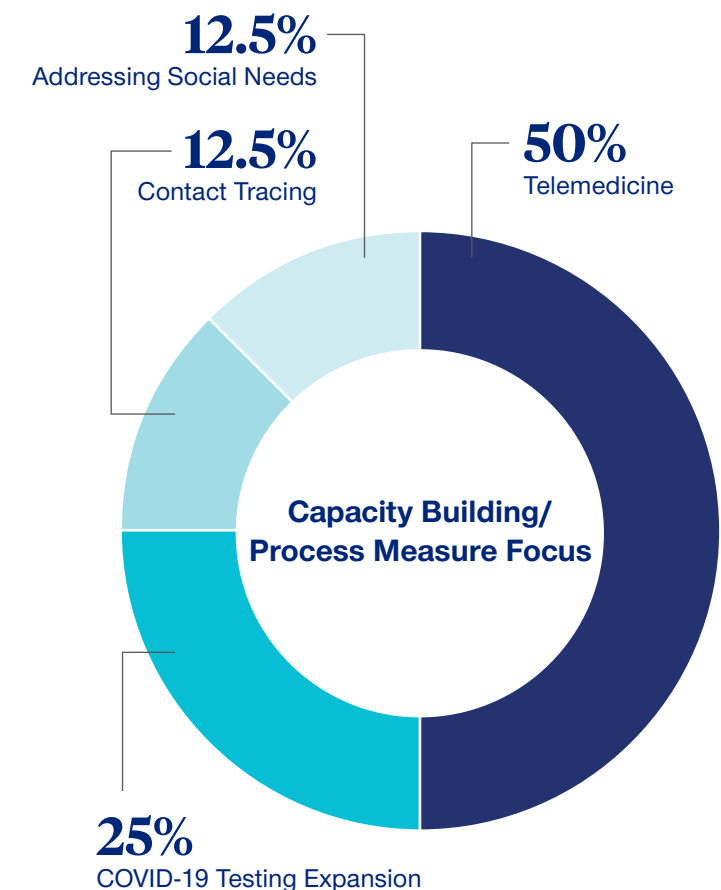

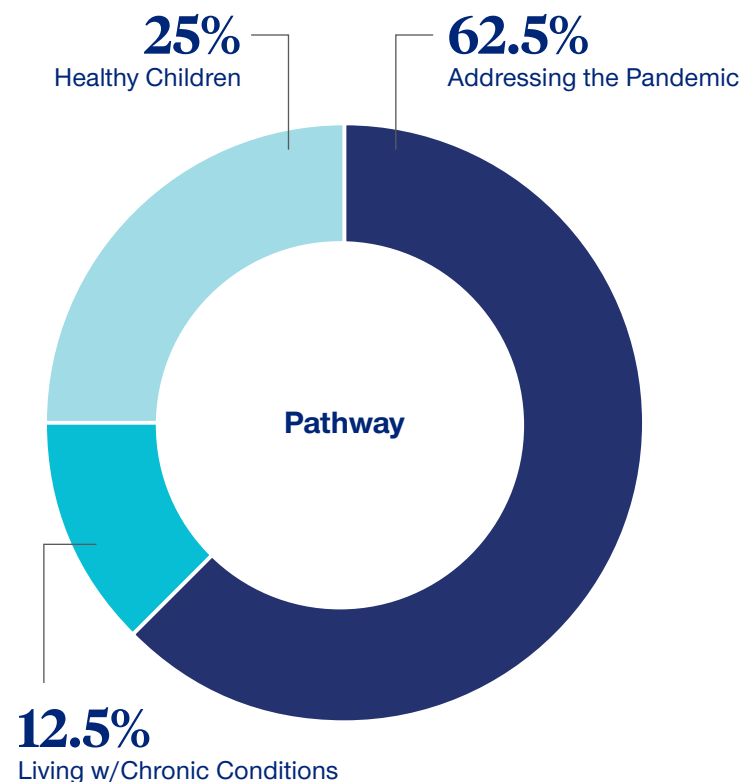

COVID-19 is an unprecedented public health emergency that has amplified existing health disparities and significantly affected the nation's safety net, posing many new and growing challenges for FQHCs. As part of our mission to help people live healthier lives, we're providing support to FQHCs through Transformation Investments and our Community Catalyst program.

FQHC Transformation Investments

UnitedHealthcare launched the FQHC Transformation Investment Program to address decreased cash flow at FQHCs and the need to invest in capacity building efforts as a result of the historic shift in utilization caused by the public health emergency. The program has invested $20 million in over 300 health centers in 22 states, including nearly $500,000 invested in eight Rhode Island FQHCs.

The FQHC Transformation Investment Program is a one-time investment based on a portion of the individual FQHC's 2019 utilization. The FQHCs commit to specific process measures aligned with their selected pathways to demonstrate that they have translated the payment into targeted transformation efforts.

With the Transformation Investments, FQHCs have pursued community-based solutions to expand access and improve outcomes. Most Rhode Island FQHCs have used the investments to focus on Addressing the Pandemic and Healthy Children, the majority of which are building their Telemedicine and Digital Engagement capacity to meet those needs.

Community Providers

Investing in Rhode Island Communities to Improve Health Outcomes

UnitedHealthcare Community Plan of Rhode Island has invested $250,000 in two FQHCs through the Community Catalyst program, which is a collaborative effort to address social needs, advance population health, and most importantly, to improve and expand access to care for the communities we serve.

By partnering with each health center for a year, the program is supporting strategic collaboration to develop and implement a plan to address one area of health that is either specific to a patient population, a social issue or a health condition.

As we continue to build on our existing partnerships and broaden our reach with very strategic focus area initiatives, we will be able to fulfill on our united mission to help people live healthier lives and help make the health care system work better for everyone.

Addressing Health Disparities and the Opioid Crisis

The East Bay Community Action Program (EBCAP) is a FQHC, a state licensed Community Mental Health Center (CMHC) and a Community Action Program serving families with integrated health and enabling services. They make up one of the large investments, with $100,000 worth of funding going toward their efforts to help the youth and adolescent population, specifically those enrolled at East Providence High School and at-risk youth eligible for Family Care Community Partnership. The catalyst funding will support operational activities that will increase access to and improve the quality of substance-use disorder treatment as well as community medical and behavioral health services.

The hope is to positively impact health disparities, address social needs, advance population health and address the opioid crisis.

Improving Access to Care

Another $150,000 is going to Providence Community Health Center (PCHC), and the only FQHC in Providence, Rhode Island. PCHC offers primary care services that are affordable, comprehensive, and culturally sensitive to around 60,000 residents of Providence and the surrounding areas. The target population will be Medicaid patients that are at highest risk, roughly the top 8% of our members.

The goal of this collaboration is to implement a high-risk clinic designed to provide integrated care navigation with community health advocates, telemonitoring with telemedicine, integrated nurse care management and longer provider visits to better address complex problems and enhance engagement with patients. By also partnering with Farm Fresh Rhode Island, patients will have access to healthy food choices to help improve their quality of life.

Community Solutions

UnitedHealthcare Makes Strides to Promote Health Equity in Rhode Island

When it comes to health, numbers don't always tell all. To better identify the health needs of Rhode Islanders, promote health equity and reduce health disparities, UnitedHealthcare Community Plan is going beyond the figures and developing detailed analysis through focus groups and interviews with our Medicaid members. This qualitative approach is timely as a recent federal report described the need for qualitative data (e.g., focus groups and interviews) to identify patients' health needs and improve health.

Health equity is when everyone has a fair and equal opportunity to access health care and to be as healthy as possible. On the flip side, health care disparities are when there are barriers and differences in the amount and quality of care that certain populations receive. It is known that many social determinants of those eligible for Medicaid, such as lack of housing, poverty, food insecurity and more, are barriers to healthy outcomes.

This health equity project is ongoing, but some of our initial findings include:

- A desire for more educational information and classes, specifically around chronic disease management, to increase utilization of health care services
- Suggestions for increased community integration to connect people to services and case workers, ensuring adequate service delivery, to help increase utilization of substance misuse treatment services
- Current barriers to building trust in health care systems include cost and racial bias. Facilitators of building trust include greater transparency around cost, racial concordance and a greater emphasis on whole-person care
- Desired social determinants of health programs include improved transportation services and/or reimbursement for commercial rideshares, more coordination for community services, housing programs for people with severe illnesses, culturally specific nutrition program and social support programs specific to subgroups of people

*Member verbatim

“ So I never ever thought to seek out my health insurance company about the housing because I never connected the two things together. I just kind of was like, these two are separate. They're not like about my health. But when you think about it, where you live in your environment really does affect your health. So if I had known that my insurance company had a way for me to get into a shelter faster that would be cool, because it's not that I would get a leg in the door before anybody else, but just a leg up.”

Containing Costs for Program Sustainability

At UnitedHealthcare Community Plan, we care for the individual and the many through transformative provider and community partnerships, which results in program sustainability.

We focus on programs and practices that deliver proactive, integrated care that addresses not just health conditions, but also the social and environmental factors related to an individual's well-being. This approach is designed to streamline administrative inefficiencies to prioritize high-value care, improve efficiency and reduce duplication of services and treatments that only address a portion of the underlying health need — ultimately curbing costs while also improving outcomes.

Working together, the state, providers and payers can improve the value to our members and all Rhode Islanders.
